de Chimay, who Is a devotee, complained to the Queen (who never dines at her own table, but always at Madame de Polignac's) that her chaplains, to whom the Queen's dinner is served, had meat on Fridays, and so Her Majesty ordered them to have only meagre fare*

gth. Dined at the Count d'Angevillers. His wife (she was Madame de Marchais) is a bel esprit, good-natured and agreeable* but fiatieuse OM *dernier degre One seldom sees her face as she wears a large hat and a veil.

14$. The Dukes de Chartres and Montpensiers Count de Beaujolois, Mademoiselle d'Orleans, Madame de Sillery (Genlis), C6sar Ducrest, Pamela,[1] Henriette de Cercy, Mr. and Mrs. Eden and their children, breakfasted, or rather dined, with us-

17$. Spent the evening at Bellechasse with Madame de Sillery, The Duke de Chartres is very well educated and well mannered* but rather formal and dressy. Beaujolois is a fine spirited boy. Mademoiselle is petite, but pretty.

*i.8th Dinner and ball at the Dorset's.

*igth I was presented to the Duchess de la Valli&re, aged seventy-nine. She was a famous

/ Pamela, afterwards married to Lord E. Fitzgerald.